A switch gear malfunction at the Central Energy Plant located adjacent to the James H. Floyd Veterans Memorial Building resulted in a power outage at the East Tower of the building and HVAC systems are offline for several Capitol Hill buildings.

Two Georgia Building Authority employees were injured while repairing the switch gear. They are currently receiving medical attention and the Georgia Building Authority is in the process of contacting the families of the injured employees.

Further details will be released as they become available.

No one in the East Tower was hurt. Due to the loss of electricity, state employees in the East Tower are being released early.

The Georgia Building Authority is in the process of conducting a thorough investigation of the incident.
